Reading Level 8 Surviving Hurricane Katrina Narrative Selection

"We need to walk now," Papa said when they got to a location where the water level had subsided enough to make the top steps of a few houses visible.

"Where are we going?" Zavier asked.

"Forward," was all Papa said.

Zavier shoved the shattered shingles into his pocket, scrambled off the door, and stepped into waist-high water. Papa grabbed his son's unsteady hand, but gusting winds tore through their fingers, trying to pull them apart.

Zavier knew how hurricanes formed, why their critical ingredient is warm sea water, and how evaporation of that water creates condensation. Condensation releases heat from sea water, and this process fuels the storm's power. Although he was knowledgeable about hurricanes, he could not believe that a logical and scientific process could result in such devastation. He also could not believe that the city of New Orleans was collapsing and the people were dissolving into the depths of despair.

For four hours they slogged through black water, pelting rain, and gusting winds, until Zavier noticed a power boat driven by a uniformed officer.

Whistling and waving his arms above his head, Papa yelled, "Can you get us out of this swamp?"

"No," said the officer in an almost inaudible reserved voice, "because I have to verify who's still stranded in this area."

"Are you with the Coast Guard?" asked Papa.

"Yes, sir," said the officer. "We got right to work as soon as we arrived in the city."

"I just can't believe all this devastation," Papa began.

"Hurricane Katrina is a Category 4 storm with winds up to 140 miles per hour and a 20-foot storm surge, immersing 80 percent of New Orleans under water. Unbelievable, yes, but this crisis has been brewing because the levees have kept salt and fresh water out of the wetlands. With the wetlands eroding, your city has literally shifted closer to the Gulf. This is a difficult situation because you need those levees to protect the city as it continues to sink farther below sea level, but the levees are the problem too because they are crumbling around you."

The Coast Guard officer stopped chattering, swallowed, and then said, "I'm sorry, but you have to leave because additional flood gates are being opened to level off the water, and it's going to have the effect of a tidal wave."

"Head to the Superdome," the Coast Guard officer recommended, "because the mayor has designated it as a temporary emergency shelter to house folks who need a place to
